- Trade in agreement with 4 hour market flow especially when it is in agreement with COT data.
- Letting your trades run comes with experience and the more you do the same thing consistently when you go into the market that's when you start trusting your positions and your trades. This means letting them run for the longer term objective.
- NEVER let a trade go 30 pips in your favor without taking something off the position. That's one of the most important things to suggest to a new trader.
- Once you take a little bit off a trade, then you can let it run for the long term.
- Implied support & resistance like pivots is trumped by real price action. Support can become resistance and resistance can become support on these.
- Look for confluences of AT LEAST 3 of any kind of thing in your trades. That is not the hard part. The hard part is waiting for those nice confluences to happen because we always want to trade every session. The patience factor is paramount. You need to have enough patience to let these tools fall in line. Don't force them and trading becomes so rewarding and fulfilling. It's fun when everything lines up and there is no rush to judgment.
- Pivots are not a hard buy and sell zone. A buy zone can be flipped to a sell zone and vice versa.
- Whatever has the most confluences and agreements the chances are that you will be profitable so hold on to your trade and use your swing projections and other means of getting out.
- If you talk about a trade too much you could start to marry the vein and getting out before you should.
- It is so exciting and a huge rush when everything starts coming together.
- One of the confusing things about Forex is knowing what time it is.
